

Granville homes has been and continues to be a vibrant and financially healthy company. However we have been navigating through difficult financial endeavors created not from our home building activity but from the fall out from the demise of the farming operations that i was a partner in with my brothers Farid and Farshid. Farid was the point person in the family who managed the finances of the farming operation. Although the home building and land development market is experiencing difficult conditions, Granville homes, remains financially healthy. This has happened through the disposition of certain assets and acquisition of others.

This is a lawsuit filed by a disgruntled former employee of Granville homes whose work performance did not justify his continued employment. During his 24 months of employment, he expected Granville to gift him several homes, give him a large salary increase and percent ownership of the company.

Granville looks forward to continue building homes in the central valley for decades to come.
